foreword

An open door is an invitation to inquiry. Life is motivated by an eager quest for knowledge.

Our goal, education of each individual, is one step closer to completion with every door we walk through.

to Mr. Lloyd W. Cousins

Music, ever present in the heart of this accomplished and sensitive man, is dynamically projected by him into our lives.

He shares unselfishly the wealth of knowledge derived from his travels, studies, and experiences, thus cultivating within us a deeper understanding of the arts.

Motivated by a compassion for individual need he gives freely of his time and energy in an endeavor to further our interests and cultural accomplishments.

As an expression of our gratitude, we dedicate this book to him...artist and friend.

Our world is shrinking rapidly as we move into the "Unknown" space age with missiles, rockets, space platforms, etc. It makes us wonder just where our scientific "progress" is taking us. We all realize that we need more of science and mathematics than we have ever had before, and we also need to encourage our fine young people with scientific interests and abilities to go into this important field. We must not get out of balance in our thinking and go overboard for the scientific neglecting other areas of learning and living that help build for strengths in our American way of life. As teachers and future teachers we must realize the importance of "balance" in education. The Humanities and Social Sciences must not be neglected. We have a long ways to go in the area of human relations and our ability to get along with people.

It is encouraging to see that American educators realize the importance of this balance. It not only gives one experiences in broad subject matter areas but helps build for a philosophy of life that we all need in a world filled with fears and uncertainties. Along with this broad experience in general education comes a greater inner security. Let us not forget that what goes into one's education becomes a part of the individual and can never be removed. This is another one of the strengths of our American educational system. The concern and respect for the individual must always be our foremost goal.

In childhood as in adulthood, the ability to work in harmony with others while sustaining individuality is ever essential.

Thus the classes complement each other in an endeavor to promote unity throughout the school, yet each group maintains its own particular functions and traditions.

In keeping with one of the school's loveliest traditions, the sophomore class carries a chain of daisies through which the graduates pass on their way to the commencement exercises. Leading the colorful procession the flower bearers salute the senior class.

Graduate Study

National College of Education

The graduate program at National College, now six years old, is primarily directed toward the advanced preparation of teachers, administrators, and supervisors in elementary education. The college recognizes that four years of preparation is only a beginning in terms of the requirements for guiding the teaching-learning process with today's youth, and that continued growth on the part of the teacher requires advanced study. The rapid advancements in air travel and communication, the vast scientific and technological developments are all accompanied by an increasing need to establish goals and values that will sustain this progress and give direction and meaning to life.

Our graduate program is dedicated not only to increasing the professional competencies of educational leaders, but to providing some depth and breadth in the fields of general education.

Kenneth E. Howe
Director - Graduate Studies

organizations

Mutual enjoyment attained by working in small or large groups draws children closer to one another.

We, too, share these joys as the many clubs of the school give us a chance to use our abilities and to gain new skills. Our happiness is further increased as new friendships are molded and sealed through the bonds of shared interest.

Upon completion of our study of child growth and the current trends in teaching methods, we were given the opportunity to put theory into practice.

A guided program of observation and participation in the Children's School of the college afforded us an insight into the practices and applications of principles derived through our studies.

In supplementing the background gained during the freshman year with a study of the techniques in the areas of language arts, social studies and children's literature, we were able to embark upon our first student-teaching experience. In so doing, we were afforded the chance to try our hand at making teaching materials -- posters and games, as well as to experience the joy of offering a part of ourselves to the children.

For the purpose of widening the student's scope of the total school and its program, a September Field Experience is set up. By taking active part in orientation programs, the prospective teacher gains a clearer understanding of the particular school's policies. Method courses in music, speech, and arithmetic are made a part of this eighteen week teaching period.

The year's varied and beneficial program completes the student's required terms of practice teaching.

A unique feature of the school's specialized curriculum is the opportunity provided the seniors for a full-time teaching experience. At this time the student is able to devote his time and efforts exclusively to the activities and responsibilities concerned with the school system of which he is a part.

scholarships

Through gifts and funds presented by friends and alumnae of the college, scholarships are awarded on the basis of scholastic achievement and student teaching ability to deserving members of the junior and senior classes. Such an award is, indeed, an honor of which the recipients and their friends are proud.

Gaiety and laughter, typified by the children we see around us, provide the release we seek from worries assumed in our daily work.

Friendships and new interests result from our many social activities -- activities which keep us young in spirit.

dorm association

Dorm life shall long live in our thoughts as a time of personality sharing --- an enrichment of our college experience.

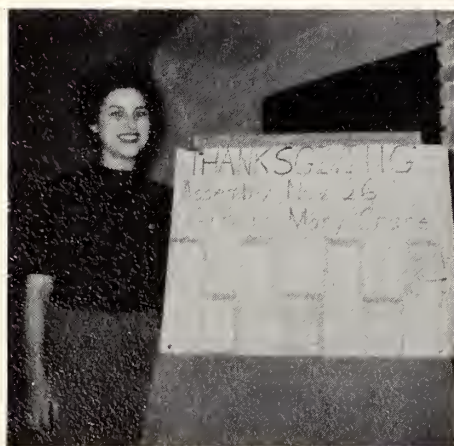

It shall be remembered --- the gay pajama parties; dress-up dinners; sentimental engagement ceremonies; and the jolting fire drills.

The dorm's social calendar was marked by the celebration of traditionally exciting Hoot Nanny night followed by Thanksgiving and Christmas dinners. January of this year saw an attractive addition to the lounge --- a new television set.

Yes, living in our hearts will be the happy and nostalgic memories of life at Marienthal Hall.

Under the direction of Miss Dorothy Higgenbotham, Mrs. Jean Duffy, Mrs. Marjorie Lindman and Mr. Lloyd Cousins the spectacular Duckwickian festival was climaxed by the crowning of a queen, Enid Schubert, our own May Queen!
